μῆνιν

[Lucas Battich]

By Way of Preface

[Menagerie of Uncredited Quotes And Ready-Made Concepts]

Seeing is when you forget the name of what you are looking at.

One mark of originality that can win canonical status for a literary work is a strangeness that we either never altogether assimilate, or that becomes such a given that we are blinded to its idiosyncrasies.

Anything that cannot be marketed will inevitably vanish.

Totalitarianism becomes the result of the individualistic fanaticism for free choice and boundless consumption.

Tradition is not only a handing-down or process of benign transmission; it is also a conflict between past genius and present aspiration, in which the prize is literary survival or canonical inclusion.

It takes two to make an image.

I refuse to inherit anything from another eye than my own.

The decision about the finality of the ending is itself never final.

For art comes to you proposing to give nothing but the highest quality of your moments as they pass, and simply for those moments' sake.

With serial imagery the masterpiece concept is abandoned.

'Homer' was not the name of a historical poet, but a fictitious or constructed name.

Geniuses are more instinctive and less reasonable than other people.

Canons, which negate the distinction between knowledge and opinion, which are the instruments of survival built to be time-proof, not reason-proof, are of course desconstructible; if people think there should not be such things, they may very well find the means to destroy them.

The job of the artist is not to destroy but to change the value of things.

Art is individualism, and individualism is a disturbing and disintegrating force. There lies its immense value. For what it seeks is to disturb monotony of type, slavery of custom, tyranny of habit, and the reduction of man to the level of a machine.

All literary works are confined to the indefinite murmur of words.

Plagiarism is necessary. Progress implies it. It holds tight an author's phrase, uses his expressions, eliminates a false idea, and replaces it with just the right idea.

Left-wing irony or melancholy urges us to admit that all our desires for subversion still obey the law of the market and that we are simply indulging in the new game available on the global market – that of unbounded experimentation with our lives.

I will leave no memoirs.

By the time the Homeridai come into view in the latter part of the sixth century, the earlier existence of a family is part of their mythology and quite unverifiable. They had their reasons for inventing it, and an original Homer from whom it had descended.

Nostalgia inevitably appears as a defence mechanism in a time of accelerated rhythms of life and historical upheaval.

To ask for explanations constitutes a moral threat to the pretension, so common and yet so "distinguished", of thinking of oneself as an ineffable individual capable of ineffable experiences.

To name an object is to sacrifice three-quarters of that enjoyment of the poem, which comes from the pleasure of guessing bit by bit. To suggest it – that is our dream.

Today the canon appears less a barricade to storm than a ruin to pick through.

Only by self-consciousness being roused to revolt does it know its own peculiar torn and shattered condition; and in its knowing that it has ipso facto risen above that condition.

Individual parts of a system are not in themselves important but are relevant only in the way they are used in the enclosed logic of the whole.

Our historical consciousness is always filled with a multiplicity of voices that echo the past.

The defining of self means the purposeful neglect of all that is other than self.

If the modernists felt tradition to be an oppressive burden, we are likely to feel it as an unbearable lightness of being.

Art is a game between all people of all periods.

Because the sign is arbitrary, it follows no law other than that of tradition, and because it is based on tradition, it is arbitrary.

Don't liberate me – I'll take care of that.

Never, never, never, never, never.

There is no doctrine that one could absorb, no knowledge that one could preserve.

Seriality is premised on the idea that the succession of terms within a single work is based on numerical or otherwise predetermined derivation.

Everything lies open to view.

There is no doctrine that one could absorb, no knowledge that one could preserve.

For all good poetry is the spontaneous overflow of powerful feelings: and though this be true, Poems to which any value can be attached were never produced on any variety of subjects but by a man who, being possessed of more than usual organic sensibility, had also thought long and deeply.

Be cruel.

While each individual word has its own integrity, you can put them together to create very different paragraphs. And it's that paragraph I claim authorship of.

Homer does not say, nor does he conceal – he indicates.
